What Kinds of Damages Are Included in a Settlement?

A typical personal injury case looks at both special damages and general damages before determining the size of a settlement. Special damages refer to medical expenses, lost wages, and even property damage, which are common damages associated with a personal injury case.

Additionally, general damages refer to pain and suffering, emotional stress, and any mental anguish, resulting from a personal injury.

All in all, regardless of the personal injury accident, settlement amounts greatly depend on the severity of your injuries and financial losses.

Why Wait?

The statute of limitations in the state of Florida for most personal injury claims is four years. This means that you have within a four-year timeframe to file a personal injury claim. But considering how lengthy personal injury claims can be, time is always of the essence. This is why it is crucial to have a skilled Florida personal injury attorney on your side to guide you through the steps of receiving a settlement you deserve.
