Personal Injury in Jupiter, Florida

While a personal injury case might provide some folks with some hope that there is a way out, there are things everyone should know about filing a personal injury claim. First, a personal injury case can be lengthy. Therefore, it may be some time before victims are able to receive a settlement or compensation for those damages.

The process of filing a personal injury claim typically involves research, sifting through medical records and history, gathering evidence, and even negotiating with others involved in the accident and insurance companies. In some cases, a court trial may be necessary.

If all this seems incredibly daunting, it is. This is why it's important to have a personal injury attorney on your side who can help you with the following:

- Injuries from a car or truck accident
- Injuries from a premises accident (such as a slip and fall accident in a public place)
- Injuries due to negligent security
- Injuries resulting in long-term medical care
- Injuries related to burns
- Wrongful death

What Does a Settlement Cover?

Depending on the case and circumstances, a settlement can cover both special damages and general damages. So what is the difference? Special damages often refer to medical bills, costs, and all expenses; lost wages from work; property damage; and so on. General damages refer more to pain and suffering.

Remember, not all personal injury cases qualify for pain and suffering damages. Be sure to discuss this with your personal injury attorney.

Now is the Time

Under the statute of limitations in Florida, victims have approximately four years to file a personal injury claim after an accident. While this seems like a great deal of time, victims should understand that some personal injury claims can take years before they see a settlement. Of course, this greatly depends on the nature and complexities of the case.

However, the best course of action is to hire a personal injury lawyer in Jupiter, Florida immediately after an accident. This will ensure that your legal team has the necessary time frame to prepare and organize a case, and to maximize your opportunities for a good settlement.
